Cardiff MRCS Course: Basic Sciences and Clinical Application for MRCS A

Basic sciences such as anatomy, physiology, pathology and microbiology are the principal components for developing a strong foundation in surgical training and for the understanding of its clinically applied aspects such as surgical anatomy and critical care physiology. As such, these subjects form an integral part in the MRCS A exam.

This intensive three-day course provided the attendee with an overview of basic physiological principles, consolidated the candidate's core and applied surgical knowledge in anatomy and relevant pathology, and provided a focused revision of pertinent topics as tested in the exam. The course took into consideration the recent changes to the MRCS A exam, with more emphasis on basic sciences – especially anatomy.

The course was structured into three distinct, but related, days. On Day 1, the emphasis was on basic and surgically applied anatomy, and relevant system specific pathology. Day 2 predominately covered cancer pathology, microbiology, genetics, statistics, embryology, autonomous nervous system and head & neck anatomy. Day 3 covered trauma, general pathology, benign and malignant tumours, principles of surgery, burns and applied surgical sciences.

It was advised that delegates attended all three days of the course to get the full benefit. However, if they were particularly strong in the topics on any of the three days, the option to attend the individual days of the course was available.
