Borderline Resectable Pancreatic Adenocarcinomas:

An Overview, Principles of Management and Future Innovations

Pancreatic ductal adenocarcinoma is one of the most lethal cancers worldwide, characterised by poor prognosis and a rising incidence. It is highly destructive due to its particularly aggressive biology, late detection, local and distant spread, and the management challenges it poses. Consequently, it is the fourth most frequent cause of cancer-related deaths worldwide, with a five-year overall survival of less than 8%. Surgical resection is curative, although only about 10-20% of cancers are resectable at diagnosis. Another 20% of patients present with Borderline Resectable Pancreatic Cancer or Adenocarcinomas (BRPC). In this cohort of patients diagnosed with pancreatic carcinomas, it is important to identify patients with BRPC from unresectable disease and recognise the role of oncological treatment modalities to increase the resectability rate and improve the long-term survival. This lecture was delivered by Mr Ricky Bhogal, Consultant HPB Surgeon at The Royal Marsden Hospital in London, who is a highly regarded expert in this field.

Topics covered:

Borderline Resectable Pancreatic Cancers:

- o current incidence
- o definition
- o principles of management
- o treatment options
- o outcomes and prognosis
- o current developments and future advances
