An Essential Overview of the Presentation and Management of Pancreatic Cancers

This talk discussed the basics of pancreaticobiliary malignancy, in particular pancreatic cancer. Pancreatic cancer is a very aggressive form of cancer, with an overall five-year survival rate as low as approximately 10%. The incidence of this cancer is increasing worldwide. An understanding of the clinical presentation, diagnostic and staging investigations, initial management, and systemic and surgical treatment is important for any junior doctor.

This session aimed to build the confidence of senior medical students and Foundation Year 1 Doctors to enable them to better appreciate this disease and understand the patient's journey. It also provided an overview of the staging and the current modalities of treatment available to manage this type of cancer.
